

“Leadership and National Security Reform: The Next President’s Agenda”
Annenberg Presidential Conference Center
College Station, Texas
March 20, 2008

A Conference Addressing National and International Security Reforms and the Next Presidency

This half-day conference will examine the contemporary international environment and American national security policy for the next presidential administration. We will explore how threats, policies, and strategies have changed since 2001 and how the U.S., European, and other international security systems have responded to changing requirements. Conference participants from Washington, D.C., the Southwestern United States, the Bush Presidential Library Foundation, Texas A&M, and other universities, will learn about the various challenges to national security and the reform proposals that will shape the next President’s agenda.

The conference will center on three themes:

- In the post-911 world, what are the threats and challenges facing the next presidential administration?
- What reforms are needed to the current national, European, and international security systems in terms of policy, institutions, and leadership?
- How can the next presidential administration affect change to improve US and international security?

The conference is cosponsored by The Bush School of Government and Public Service, Scowcroft Institute of International Affairs, European Union Center of Excellence, Lyndon B. Johnson School of Public Affairs, Strauss Center for International Security and Law, Creative Associates International, Inc., Center for the Study of the Presidency, and the Army War College Strategic Studies Institute.

Most sessions are free and open to the public
